A silver chalice with intricate floral patterns on its stem and base, filled with a golden liquid, sits on a white cloth. Beside it is a loaf of rustic, golden-brown bread, partially broken into several pieces. The background is dark, making the silver and bread stand out.

The latest in a series of events for those interested in exploring how church can be purposefully intergenerational: What does it look like to include and welcome every generation to the Lord's table? What do our practices say, what don't they say, and how can we honour those with faith like little children?
